WOMEN DRINK LESS UNDER NEW LAW

(By Associated Press.)

LONDON, Oct. 27.—The no-treating law now enforced in the London district will from present indications greatly decrease drinking among women, for it is among the women of the lower classes that treating is the most prevalent. Even in the most poverty-stricken slums of the East End, a woman who drinks by herself is considered mean, greedy and unsocial and she is accordingly ostracized. The only social life among these women is at the public houses. At all times of the day they may be seen around the bars or in the street in front with their glasses in hand. Since the law prevents minors entering the bars, the women with babies in arms stand outside for their drinks. But often children tend to the babies while the mothers and grandmothers are inside.

The no-treating order went into effect in the West End and in the more respectable parts of London without a protest. It was taken as a joke, and the public houses were crowded with men buying their last treat. But in the East End, actual resentment was felt, chiefly among the women. They regarded it as a blow at their chief source of amusement.

Settlement workers count on taking advantage of the new liquor regulations by starting more social halls. A number of these are in operation in the slums now, and their popularity is growing. They were especially designed for soldiers and their girls as a cheap place to spend an evening. The halls are provided with pianos and games, and tea and other soft drinks are sold at cost price. Heretofore, the saloon, or "pub," has been the only social meeting place for the people of the slums, who are glad to escape their own dismal tenements.

He says that the company has given favorable consideration to the proposition presented by the Mizpah Extension company to use the Halifax workings for development work.
